Course requirements

Each student will give at least one oral report, of no more than ten minutes, on a suggested or required reading assignment. The oral report should be given from notes, not read. Each student will write two papers, of about ten pages each. Students should write papers in two of the following three categories: an analysis of a particular work by Freud; a reading of a literary work in relation to Freud’s thought; or a commentary on a suggested secondary reading. (One of these papers may be an expansion of an oral presentation). The first paper should be submitted no later than Friday, October 20. The second is due Friday, December 15.

Consult the MLA Handbook or The Chicago Manual of Style for guidelines about documentation. Your essays should be printed in 12-point font, with margins of one inch. You should document all your sources for any ideas or information if you are unsure whether they originated with you. (This includes any information you find on the web; it is normally unnecessary, however, to footnote class discussion or widely known biographical or historical facts). Graduate School regulations require that I report all cases of plagiarism to the Executive Committee. You can find further information in a pamphlet entitled “Sources: Their Use and Acknowledgment.” See http://www.dartmouth.edu/~sources/.

Participation will be taken into consideration in assigning a final grade; you may participate in class and by contributing to the on-line discussion forum (accessible from classesv2.yale.edu). Each student is expected to make at least three contributions to the on-line forum over the course of the semester, and all students are expected to read the on-line forum weekly.

Students are expected to have read the three Shakespeare plays (Hamlet, King Lear, and The Merchant of Venice) before class begins. King Lear and The Merchant of Venice will form a fairly minor part of the discussion, so it may not be necessary to re-read these two plays if you have read them fairly recently. Those with little background in psychoanalysis are advised to read Freud’s Introductory Lectures on Psychoanalysis over the summer. Students with knowledge of Greek or German are encouraged to read the literary works in the original language.
